Re Item III

Non-establishment of opinion with regard to novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability Claims 38-49 relate to subject-matter considered by this Authority to be covered by the provisions of Rule 67.1(iv) PCT, namely to methods for treatment of the human or animal body by therapy. Consequently, no opinion will be formulated with respect to novelty, inventive step and industrial applicability of the subject-matter of these claims (Article 34(4)(a)(i)).

In particular, independent method claim 38 includes medical treatment steps like coupling a patient to a rehabilitation system and performing a rehabilitation activity, the purpose and inevitable effect being therapeutic, namely rehabilitation of lost limb control.

II. Requirements of Article 6 PCT - Clarity

1. According to claim 1, the rehabilitation apparatus comprises a sensor adapted to sense a movement of a motion support element which latter is adapted to support a motion of a part of a human, and a controller adapted to modify a generator provided rhythmic audio in accordance with the sensed movement. As a consequence, it is not clear how such an apparatus could be suitable for a patient who is completely unable to control the limb, and thus to actively move the limb, as mentioned in the description, page 11, lines 1, 2.

Further, several examples mentioned in the description do not necessarily comprise an audio generator, or do not correlate audio and movement, and thus are not covered by independent claim 1: See e.g. page 10, lines 15, 16; page 18, lines 10-12; page 24, lines 1-10 (correlation between movement and "points" instead of audio).

2. According to claim 1, the controller is adapted to control the generator of audio to generate rhythmic audio timed to a stored desired movement. However, it is neither clear if the features "correctness" and "error" as mentioned in claims 13-17 are related to that stored desired movement (see especially claim 15: is the "stored plan" identical to the "stored desired movement"?), nor which additional structural features (cf. first sentence of Rule 6.4(a) PCT) of the apparatus should be defined by these claims.

A plurality of dependent claims is totally vague and thus likewise leaves the reader in doubt which additional structural features are intended to be claimed. Further, numerous claims attempt to define the invention in terms of a result to be achieved, rather than defining the structural technical features that are necessary to achieve the stated result (Article 6 PCT; PCT International Search and Preliminary Examination Guidelines 5.35). See especially claims 20-29, 31, 34.

III. Requirements of Article 33(2), (3) PCT - Novelty / Inventive step

1. Document D6, which is regarded as being the closest prior art to the subject-matter of claim 1, discloses (see esp. Figs. 1, 2) (the references in parentheses applying to this document):

A rehabilitation apparatus, comprising:
at least one motion support element (handle (6)) adapted to support a motion of a part of a human;

at least one sensor adapted to sense a movement and generate a movement signal of said at least one motion support element (force sensor at the lower end of (6), see [0013], [0014]);
a generator of audio (see [0017]); and, a controller in communication with said generator and said at least one sensor, said controller adapted to:
control said generator of audio to generate rhythmic audio timed to a stored desired movement of said human (see [0012], [0017], claim 1); and receive said sensed movement signal from said at least one sensor.

Due to the provision that the controller is adapted to modify the generator provided rhythmic audio in accordance with said sensed movement signal, the rehabilitation effect of the apparatus is improved.

In the apparatus known from D6 the sensor is used only to start movement of the apparatus in the back or forth direction. Once the patient is walking, walk is continued with the help of rhythmic audio. However, the rhythm of the audio is not changed. On the contrary, even if the patient applies a much stronger force on the handle, the fixed speed of the apparatus, which is set beforehand, is maintained (see e.g. claim 1 and [0014]). Thus, D6 teaches away from the claimed subject-matter. The other available prior art likewise does not contain any hint to provide a controller that is adapted to modify the rhythmic generator provided audio in accordance with the sensed movement signal.

As a consequence, the subject-matter of claim 1 is considered not only as being novel (Article 33(2) PCT), but also as involving an inventive step (Article 33(3) PCT).

2. Claims 2-37 are dependent on claim 1 and as such also meet the requirements of the PCT with respect to novelty and inventive step.
